public that he has added to his former variety of Stoves, a new Palented: Gas-burning COOKING STOVE.

It is well known that all inflammable matter requires a certain amount of air to sup-nort combustion, and if the supply is insuf-ficient, it is impossible to produce a flame. The heat of the fire, in ordinary cooking stoves, decomposes the fact, and as all the fresh air is admitted under the grate, its oxygen is exhausted before it has passed through the fire-chamber. The close flues at the top of the stove, then act as an extinthe top of the stove, then act as an extin-guisher, tending to put out the fire, instead of assisting the combustion. A large portion of the fuel, therefore, passes off in the shape of smoke, clogging up the flues of the stove so as to impede the draft and interfere with the baking,—or of invisible gas which combines with the lime and so destroys the mortar of the chimneys, loosening the bricks, and exposing the dwellings to the danger of fire. The introduction of an additional supply of cold air, would cool the gas below the igniting temperature, but by the proper application above the fire, of air previously heated to a temperature of several hundred degrees (which is one of the prominent features of the patent), the gases are inflamed in numerous jets, and their combustion is sufficient to heat the oven, even if the draft through the fire-chamber is entirely closed. In addition to the ordinary direct draft under the grate and through the fire-chamher, the gas-burner has an additional draft through the top plates, which is of itself suf-ficient to maintain combustion. The upper draft not only consumes the gases, but it helps to strengthen and preserve the centre piedes, which are most exposed to the direct action of the fire, and which are made double instead of the usual single plates. By means of this draft alone, all the operations of cooking can be carried on when the fuel is but partially ignited, and the fuel consequently burns more slowly and more economically.

COOKING STOVE.

It is well known that all inflammable matter requires a certain amount of air to support combustion, and if the supply is insufficient, it is impossible to produce a flame.

The heat of the fire in ordinary could be stores, decomposes, the fact, and as all the fresh air is admitted under the grate, its exygen, is exhausted before it has passed through the fire-chamber. The close flues at the top of the stove, then act as an extinguisher, tending to put out the fire, instead of assisting the combustion. A large portion of the fuel, therefore, passes off in the shape of smoke relogging ap the fines of the stove en as to impede the draft and interfere with the baking,—or of ipvisible gas which com-bines with the lime and so destroys the mortar of the chimneys, loosening the bricks, and indsing the dwellings to the danger of fire

The introduction of an additional supply of cold air, would coul the gas-below the ighiting temperature, but by the proper anlication above the fire, of air previously ented to a temperature of several bundred degrees (which is one of the prominent fea-tures of the patent), the gases are inflamed sufficient to heat the oven, even if the draft through the fire chamber is entirely closed.

In addition to the ordinary direct draft under the grote and through the freehamber, the gas-burner has an additional draft through the top plates, which is of itself suf-ficient to maintain combustion. The upper draft not unly consumes the gases, but it helps to strongthen and preserve the contro pieces, which gire most; exposed to the direct action of the fire, and which are made double instead of the usual single plates. By means of this draft alone, all the operations of cooking can be carried on which the fuel is but partially ignited, and the fuel consequently urns more slowly and more economically.

A sufficient evidence of the effect of the gases in heating the oven; is found in the fact that the oven will be roudy for baking, even before the fire is thoroughly, kindled, and much sooner than in any other stove.
As Gas-burning Stoves are the order of the day, the Gas-burning Cooking Stove will not only be the leading stove of the present season, but it will undoubtedly supercede all others. Purchasers will, therefore, consult it before giving any. orders elsewhere. The operation is so perfect, and its advantages are so easily to be seen and understood, that it readily commands, at retail; an advance of upon the tract. It is certainly one of the five or six dollars over the retail price of any most desirable farms now in market in this stove of the same size.
